About ColorStack

ColorStack is a 501(c)(3) nonprofit with the mission to increase the number of Black and Latinx Computer Science graduates that go on to start rewarding technical careers.

Launched in 2020 and led by Founder Jehron Petty, a 2020 Computer Science graduate from Cornell University, we're the home for Black and Latinx college Computer Science students to find confidence, community, and career development.

About Our Chapter

Founded in 2024, the Georgia State University ColorStack chapter was established to create a supportive community for Black and Latinx Computer Science students. Since then, we have grown into a thriving campus organization, offering our members invaluable opportunities and fostering meaningful connections among like minded peers.

LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT

Since starting at GSU, I've noticed a real gap in how prepared students, especially Black and Latinx students, are for landing internships and new grad roles. ColorStack Nationals changed that for me back in 2025. The resume reviews, career advice, and connections helped me land my internship at FactSet. That experience is why I brought the ColorStack chapter back to campus this year, building a new executive board and launching our chapter website along the way.

ColorStack is a cheat code for underrepresented students navigating tech. It's a space for real support, career growth, and community. I'm excited to keep building that here and help others access the same opportunities I did.
